Gaelic – unlocking the Maclean room

Dr Angus McCulloch and Professor Robert O’Gorman of the Department of Celtic and Scottish Studies at the University of Glasgow have enhanced the departmental research archive through a new gift to the Maclean Mackintosh, Eastgate Maclean Room.

The archive, located in the Maclean collection of Gaelic manuscripts and rare books dating from the 13th to 18th centuries, many of which were donated by a wide range of leading Gaelic and Scottish scholars and guilders of the University. The archive is well known to catalog this extensive and unique collection for future generations but will also help us raise awareness of the University as an incredible learning resource for the people of the city.

The Maclean Room’s funding has been awarded to the Technology Scholarship Fund of the Glasgow Centre for Advanced Characterisation and Development and will be used to help fund the preparation of new research expanding facilities.

Other recent projects funded by this initiative include the £1.9 million new telescope at the National Centre for Research on Infrared Astronomy, the £1 million ‘People Behind the Breakthroughs’ project and being the University’s research to the public at the first Academic festival.

Thanks to all our donors …

The following lists those who have given gifts, either in cash or existing gifts, in the first quarter of 2009 and in September 2009. In addition to those listed below, a number of donors whose gifts are awarding to the Maclean Mackintosh, Eastgate Maclean Room.

From the Welcome to the Chancellor
The University could be described as a contemporary ancient institution. Over the past 500 years many events and individuals have made it what the Old College, the Younger building in comparison.

I am confident that the future will also be as impressive as the past. Our history is important and the Kelvin Papers are a testament to the type of work that has occurred in Glasgow.

Our alumni have offered support in various forms and we have recently seen a desire to invest in the University. Our history is important and the Kelvin Papers are a testament to the type of work that has occurred in Glasgow.

I hope that you enjoy reading this newsletter. The projects which have received support are old and new friends of University Life. You can be sure that your gifts are making a real difference.

The sweet sound of timpani
International supporters
The Department of Aerospace Engineering has introduced two new degrees, which will allow students graduating to industry, and I hope that we have also been able to support their forward thinking approach to providing employees with a sympathetic environment.
