Summer School 2017
Our School of Interdisciplinary Studies Summer School, on the Dumfries Campus, provides you with an introduction to undergraduate university-level study in a supportive, friendly environment. It includes lectures, tutorials and assessments as well as lots of academic guidance.

Who is Summer School for?
Summer School is suitable if you have had a break in your studies, for example if you are returning to education after working or having children. It’s also a great way for school or college-leavers to make a smooth transition to university.
Summer School applicants should be aiming to enrol on a degree programme in Environmental Science and Sustainability or Health & Social Policy. Successful completion of Summer School can help you gain entry to either of these degrees.
In Health & Social Policy you will learn about subjects such as health inequalities, criteria for happiness & well-being, and truths and myths around healthy diets; and in Environmental Science you will study (among other things) the pros and cons of renewable energy sources, and the impacts of global environmental issues such as climate change.

Why consider Summer School?
Students who complete Summer School develop the confidence and academic skills to really excel at university. It offers a head start, preparing you for the challenges of higher education.
During Summer School you will have the chance to meet fellow students before your degree even starts. Previous Summer School students say that this has helped them settle in and become part of our academic community.

What does it cost?

You can apply to the Crichton Foundation for other financial support, applications are available from dumfries-admin@glasgow.ac.uk If you live outside commuting distance of Dumfries, rooms in our student residences may be available to on a temporary basis, prices are available on request.
