Blockade running during the American Civil War: Sources

How to use this list of sources

Introduction

The economic impact of the American Civil War (1861-1865) on Scotland and Clydeside in particular was far reaching. The Confederate need for manufactured goods and ships to run the blockade provided a great stimulus to shipbuilding and heavy industry in general. Clydeside firms such as Scott & Co., J. & G. Thomson, Kirkpatrick and MacIntyre, William Denny & Bros., W. Simons & Co. and Thomas Wingate & Co., produced a great many of the ships that ran the blockade, and four ships which served in the Confederate Navy. Shipbuilders were not the only group to benefit from the civil conflict. Ship owners and blockade running houses also made massive profits by running the blockade, shipping in vital and luxury goods on the inward voyage and bringing out cotton on the return trip which could be sold at vastly inflated prices in European markets. This guide is designed to illustrate the records, which University of Glasgow Archive Services hold relating to blockade runners and blockade running companies. It also suggests other records, which may contain relevant information and recommends reading on specific companies. A secondary reading list is also included; it is hoped that this will provide a useful context and introduction to blockade running during the American Civil War.
