JENZA, is all things working holidays and international internships. One team with one mission—together we support thousands of students and 18-30s each year to have life-shaping work abroad experiences in Canada, Japan, the USA, UK, Ireland, New Zealand and Australia.

We don't want to get all cult-like, but we believe that working overseas is a lower-impact way to see the world. The opposite of fast travel, you'll be paying tax dollars, spending in local communities and connecting with people and places in a more authentic way. (It's also the most fun you can have in your twenties—until all that real life stuff kicks in.)

Operation Wallacea is a network of academics from European and North American universities who design and implement biodiversity and conservation management research expeditions.

Research is supported by participants who join the programme to strengthen their CV and gain or develop skills. They could also join to collect data for a dissertation or thesis. Academics benefit from funding for high-quality fieldwork enabling them to publish papers in peer-reviewed journals.

We began working within the Wallacea region of Indonesia in 1995 and now run biodiversity research expeditions all over the world, sourcing data that has underpinned hundreds of research papers and informed high-level environmental policy decisions in the sites we work in.

The "2026 GO Heimat" project will take place from 14-28 June and offers students a unique opportunity to engage with a meaningful global topic - this time focusing on "Heimat" (roughly translated as home or homeland).

Heimat is more than just a place - it is about belonging. However, due to climate change, migration, and social transformation, the meaning of Heimat is shifting for communities worldwide. With insights from experts across various disciplines, students will explore how climate change and migration patterns affect people's sense of home and belonging. Together, we will reflect on personal connections to Heimat, examine how communities adapt, and develop creative ideas to foster resilience and solidarity.
