- To examine the current contribution of hand knitting in local and national contexts;
- To look at the ways in which Scotland's rich heritage of hand-knitted textiles can contribute to other national industries, such as tourism and fashion.

(19 October)

Summary of workshop 1: Wool

- Wool in a global market: the power of economics over production, over preparation processes and production of final product.
- Globalisation and Scottishness how Scottish is Scottish yarn?
- Wool miles: produced in Scotland, cleaned in China!

Summary (2)

- Wool work: issues re apprenticeships and continuation of skills in wool industry
- Environment and sustainability: wool production = industrial process at larger scale - not just a museum or heritage industry.
- Authenticity/provenance: increasing interest in the provenance of wool/yarn plus focus on natural/organic/local etc.

Summary 3

- Knit as process/making as meaning: meaning embedded in the process of doing (rather than the end product) and meaning attached to the materials and the making (myth, history, landscape etc)
- Narrative of the Craft: need to tell the story to sell, create an interest and a market
- Scale: the value of small scale production, ability to link product with maker
- Value: Added value to product if provenance can be shown
- Textile tourism: creating and buying into a myth? More can/should be done in Scotland to promote this important cultural and industrial heritage
- Niche Market – fixed capacity, cannot provide mainstream product and in large quantities, so what can be done to add value?
