John Thøgersen is professor of economic psychology at Department of Business Administration. He is coordinator of the Marketing and Sustainability Research Group at the Department of Business Administration. He is also the initiator and the chairman of the steering committee of the global Virtual Community on Sustainability and Consumption. Moreover, he is editor of the Journal of Consumer Policy, published by springer. In his private life, John lives with his wife in an eco-village (since 1985), commutes by public transportation, and the car his wife uses runs over 29 Km/liter diesel. When shopping, he buys organic food to the extend possible, does not buy meat from ruminants, and always look for relevant eco-labels, such as the Nordic Swan, EU’s Flower and the Marine Stewardship Council label.
