SRC President

Scott Kirby is the President of the Glasgow University Students' Representative Council. Scott has held two previous positions in the SRC as the Vice President (Student Activities) and as the Geographical and Earth Sciences School Representative. During his time on council Scott has represented students in the School of Geographical and Earth Sciences during a time of transition and transformation, and taken the lead in engaging students through delivering several campaigns. He has also lead the SRC's Raising and Giving (RAG) Committee which focuses on fundraising across the university and working with several charitable causes and local community groups, providing opportunities for students to develop themselves in the process.

Scott has taken an active role in the campus development through sitting on several project boards, which include the Institute of Health and Wellbeing, the Research Hub, the Laboratory Building and the Adam Smith Business School & PGT Hub. He has helped drive forward the agenda for more focus on Graduate Attributes and Employability, and in the past has also consulted on the development of new degree programmes in the School of Geographical and Earth Sciences.

Scott graduated from the University of Glasgow in 2017 with a BSc in Earth Sciences, and was undertaking a MSc (Research) in Earth Sciences before taking a leave of absence to undertake sabbatical roles in the SRC.
