Have you had radiotherapy for cancer, or cared for someone who has?

Do you have an interest in cancer research?

Would you be interested in volunteering to work alongside cancer researchers in Glasgow to develop our current and future research?

We are looking for patients and members of the public to join our patient and public involvement (PPI) group, who will volunteer to work alongside our cancer researchers to develop our current and future research. The focus of this group will be on improving treatments for patients by developing better radiotherapy-related treatments.

We are looking for people who:

- Have experience of radiotherapy for cancer, or cared for someone who has received radiotherapy
- Want to make a difference to future cancer research
- Have an interest and enthusiasm in the research process and helping the research to be patient focused
- Can take an active part in meetings, and to review and provide feedback on research ideas
- Have the ability to demonstrate a balanced, broad view and engage in discussions about the current research and future research needs
- Have a willingness to undertake some training

If you would like more information, please contact Anna on anna.morris@glasgow.ac.uk

All meetings are expected to be online due to Covid-19. No commitment is expected at this stage.

Thank you for your interest.
