

Saint Andrew's Foundation for Catholic Teacher Education Online Seminar Series

EDUCATING FOR JUSTICE: ENACTING CATHOLIC SOCIAL TEACHING IN OUR SCHOOLS

Often described as 'the Church's best kept secret', Catholic Social Teaching has much wisdom to offer us for addressing societal challenges such as climate change and migration. This online seminar series, hosted by the Saint Andrew's Foundation, will explore the Catholic Social Teaching tradition and how it can be applied today within Catholic educational settings.

The series will consist of five seminars, beginning with an introduction to enacting Catholic Social Teaching. The series will then address issues of migration, militarisation, and climate justice, before concluding with an in depth look at practical ways for teaching Catholic Social Teaching in schools.

This series will be of interest to school leaders, teachers, senior school pupils and students and anyone who wants to learn more about these issues. Join us by clicking on the links below and registering for the sessions.

DOROTHY DAY AND THE CATHOLIC WORKER
MOVEMENT: EMBODYING CATHOLIC SOCIAL THOUGHT AND PRACTICE

Anna Blackman

MONDAY 31ST JANUARY
5 - 6 PM

Anna is a Lecturer in Catholic Religious Education at the University of Glasgow. She has taught widely in the areas of Catholic social thought, Christian ethics, Christian apologetics, and political theology. Prior to her time at Glasgow, she lectured at the universities of Roehampton, Durham, Newcastle, and Tübingen, as well as working as a Research Associate in the area of Catholic social thought and practice at the Center for Social Concerns at the University of Notre Dame. Anna's research focuses primarily on the dialogue between Catholic social thought, political theology, and Christian ethics. In particular, she is concerned with how we can learn from grassroots faith-based movements and organizations about the best ways to incorporate faith and praxis.

40 YEARS ON FROM THE SCOTTISH BISHOPS'
PASTORAL LETTER

Archbishop William Nolan

MONDAY 28TH MARCH
5 - 6 PM

Archbishop William Nolan is the Archbishop of Glasgow and the President of the Justice and Peace National Commission, which is a Commission of the Bishops' Conference of Scotland. The National Commission campaigns on matters relating to social justice, international peace and human rights, and promotes action in these areas. In particular he has been active around the rights of refugees and migrants, visiting Calais to see first-hand the plight of those seeking sanctuary. He has also joined peaceful protests at Dungavel, Scotland's only immigration detention centre.

He has taken part in campaigns to highlight the wrongs of human trafficking, modern slavery, and child poverty. He has also been instrumental in driving the Catholic Church in Scotland to divest from fossil fuels. He is particularly passionate in supporting the campaign against nuclear weapons, joining with other Justice and Peace activists at peaceful protests at Faslane.
