

Intro

Welcome to the Neurodiversity Resource Hub!

This hub has been created as a part of a Wellcome Trust ISSF grant for a project to promote neurodiversity and support neurodivergent staff and PGRs in the School of Cancer Sciences and School of Biodiversity, One Health & Veterinary Medicine within MVLS; however, it aims to be used throughout the University. It is for all staff and Postgraduate Research Students to use.

The hub includes information on definitions that fall under the umbrella of neurodiversity; inclusive and accessible practices; support for neurodivergent staff and PGR students; and navigating working relationships from colleague-to-colleague to manager and employees to supervisor and PGR student. All materials included within this hub are either from experts in the field of neurodiversity or disability equality or from the University of Glasgow's own materials.

We hope that the Neurodiversity Resource Hub will inform, support, and promote inclusive practice for a more diverse, accessible University!

About us

The project team includes Leigh Abbott, Prof Chris Halsey, Prof Peter Hastie, Dr Elliott Spaeth, Prof Karin Oien, Prof Margaret Sutherland, and Dr David Simmons.

However, we have had several people throughout the University provide their input on the hub before its publication. A list of the contributor's names is in the Contributors section of this page. We thank you for your contributions and insights in the development of this hub.

Thank You

Thank you for taking the time to learn more about neurodiversity and disability inclusive practices. We know that this is not a compulsory part of your work/study, so thank you for wanting to promote and support a diverse, inclusive place for both PGR students and staff at the University of Glasgow.

“Access is care. Your talents are secondary. Show up in space where you can manifest care, radical softness, and joy”, Jen White-Johnson.
