SESSION 6: Research Funding Priorities Seminars

These seminars are focused on current global health research funding priorities. They are designed to be highly interactive and to stimulate discussion, ideas and collaborations for potential future research proposals.

10:00-12:00 Designing Non-Communicable Disease Interventions for the Sub-Saharan Africa Context

Leads: Dr Kathryn Skivington, Prof Cindy Gray and Prof Shona Hilton (Glasgow)

Reducing the prevalence and impact of non-communicable diseases requires the careful development of interventions that are evidence-based and represent a good fit with the context within which they are implemented. This seminar will examine the use of the 2021 Medical Research Council Complex interventions framework in the design of new/adaptation of existing interventions for Sub-Saharan African settings. It will use relevant examples to illustrate the points made and invite attendees to consider interventions relevant to their own topic and setting.

10:00-12:00 Food systems and food security

Leads: Prof Emilie Combet, Dr Esther Papies and Aishat Osagie (Glasgow)

Ensuring access to a healthy and sustainable diet for all is a major global challenge. This seminar focuses on transdisciplinarity as an approach to this challenge, using examples from the new Scottish Alliance for Food: health, equity and sustainability (SCAF). It will introduce the ways in which SCAF is working with food producers, retailers, consumers and policymakers to radically re-imagine the Scottish food landscape to deliver direct benefits for people and the environment. The workshop will invite attendees to consider the extent to which the concepts and activities might apply to their own context, and how expertise as well as experience around diet and food can feature in future projects.

12:00-14:00 Lunch break

14:00-16:00 Gender and health

Leads: Dr Anna Clover, Dr Clare McFeely, Dr Kristina Saunders and Prof Cindy Gray (Glasgow)

Gender equality and empowering women and girls is one of the 17 major priority areas identified by the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDG₅). This seminar will focus on two issues, gender-based violence and sexual and reproductive health, which are of critical importance to achieving SDG₅. It will provide examples of current work in this area to stimulate discussion around what needs to be done to better promote the health and wellbeing of women and girls in sub-Saharan Africa.

14:00-16:00	Climate change and health
	Leads: Dr Alicia Davies, Dr Nai Rui Chng and Dr Neil Munro (Glasgow)
	Urgent action is needed to mitigate the impact of climate change including on human and planetary health. This seminar will use examples from One Health and flooding/drought to explore these issues and offer attendees the opportunity to consider how climate change affects their research, and the future research priorities in relation to climate change in their own field.

This will include information about some of our administrative processes that often cause delays and how your team can minimize them. The second part will provide an overview of how research support and management work at the University of Glasgow. This will include how researchers are supported to identify funding opportunities, develop grant ideas, meet across interdisciplinary boundaries and manage their projects, along with some discussion of the different teams (research assurance, contracts, research support) that work together to support our research activity.
