About the BAC of Scotland

The Business Archives Council of Scotland (BACS) was established in 1960 as an independent archive body concerned with the active preservation of Scottish business records. It is a registered charity funded by donations from Scottish businesses and a grant-in-aid from the National Archives of Scotland.

The Council deals specifically with the preservation of Scottish business records, broadly defined to include professional bodies and associations, and the promotion of their study. Scotland has a rich industrial past and, over the past two centuries has produced some of the finest engineers, shipbuilders and inventors the world has seen.

The records of businesses provide an irreplaceable source of information on all aspects of working lives from management strategy to pay and conditions. The systematic study of a firm's archive material contributes to, and widens our knowledge of both corporate structure and the development of Scottish trade and industry.

The Council employs one full-time Surveying Officer who operates from the office of the University of Glasgow Archive Services. The Surveying Officer contacts companies in order to locate records of a historical nature. Once found the records are sorted, listed and advice offered to ensure the records' preservation, be it on the company's premises or in a public repository.

Membership

Membership of the Business Archives Council of Scotland is open to anyone with an interest in the surveying and preservation of business archive collections in Scotland.

The current annual membership rates are:

Individual	£10
Institutional	£20
