Kate Soper

Kate Soper is Professor Emerita of Philosophy at London Metropolitan University, and a Visiting Professor at Brighton University. She has published widely on environmental philosophy, aesthetics of nature, theory of needs and consumption, and cultural theory. She has been a member of the editorial collectives of Radical Philosophy and New Left Review and a regular columnist for the US journal, Capitalism, Nature, Socialism.

Her books include On Human Needs (Harvester, 1986); Humanism and Anti-Humanism (Hutchinson, 1986); Troubled Pleasures (Verso, 1990); What is Nature? Culture, Politics and the Non-Human (Blackwell, 1995); To Relish the Sublime: Culture and Self-realisation in Postmodern Times, (co-authored with Martin Ryle) (Verso, 2001). Her widely noted study of the role that new thinking about pleasure and the 'good life' can play in promoting sustainable consumption ('Alternative hedonism and the theory and politics of consumption') was funded in the ESRC/AHRC ‘Cultures of Consumption’ Programme (www.consume.bbk.ac.uk). Selected texts relating to this research include:

'Re-thinking the "good life": the citizenship dimension of consumer disaffection with consumerism', in Journal of Consumer Culture, no. 7,2, July 2007

Citizenship and Consumption, co-editor and contributor with Frank Trentmann, Palgrave, 2008

The Politics and Pleasures of Consuming Differently, co-editor with Lyn Thomas and Martin Ryle, Palgrave, 2009
