Wording Petitions
The Supplication of John Kid (d.1679)

Early modern Scots who had been imprisoned for challenging or questioning the authority of the Stuart monarchy faced the uncomfortable fact that the act of petitioning, and the language dictated by it, incorporated a submissive recognition of this very same authority. How these prisoners chose to negotiate this contradiction through the wording of their petitions exposes a significant interpretative issue for petitions as sources: which words or phrases should be considered part of their form and which might be read as genuine sentiment?

“...my friend said he had said nothing in that petition that was to the prejudice of the honest caus or that was unfaithfull...”
– Janet Chrechtoun

Petition: Submission? Sedition?

“We have no Ground to question the Matters of Fact in this Petition, since so peremptorily they undertake to prove them. The Stile is evidently that of their Lawyers, and when People are under their Management, it must be expected their Petitions will run in their Phrases... [sic] Their dying Speeches and known Sentiments make it evident, thy of themselves would never have termed this Rising a Rebellion” – Wodrow, pp.85-86.

“He continued at his own House, and always exHORTed such of the Rebels as came to him, to lay down their Arms, and supplicate for Pardon- Petition by the advocates of John Kid & John King in Wodrow, p.85

“He...being unfortunatlie near Bothwelbridge in companie with these who wer then in armes again|st your royall authortie...” – Supplication by John Kid [NLS Wod. Qu. XCIX f.242]

“...being unfortunatlie near Bothwelbridge in companie with these who wer then in armes against your royall authortie...” – Supplication by John Kid [NLS Wod. Qu. XCIX f.242]
