CALL FOR OFFERS OF PAPERS / PRESENTATIONS

The Centre for Development Studies at the University of Glasgow, within the Adam Smith Business School, is hosting a DSA Scotland mini-conference on Tuesday 13th March 2018.

The main theme for this meeting is to be ‘Contemporary Approaches to Development Policy’ – which will be the focus of the presentations and discussion in the main morning session.

In the main morning session (10.30 am to 12.00 noon) there will be three presentations, and the offers will be considered by Céline Azémar, Mozammel Huq and Michael Tribe. The deadline for receiving offers is 31st January 2018, we expect to be able to advise which offers have been accepted by no later than mid-February, and the email contact details for the organisers will be found at the end of this document.

The second session (see the draft programme following this ‘call’) will also be open to offers from researchers focussing on aspects of international development more broadly and these offers will be considered by the same group, and the same deadline applies. It is likely that this session will consist of two presentations.

The third session (again, see the draft programme following this ‘call’) will be open to Doctoral research students focussing on aspects of international development more broadly and these offers will be considered by the same group, and the same deadline applies.

The deadline is necessary in order to ensure that the selected presenters have adequate notice for preparing high quality presentations – which will be available for downloading after the conference through the DSA website (www.devstud.org.uk).

In addition to the regular presentations it is intended to have a ‘poster presentation’ display. This will be open to a) Doctoral Research students who will not be making a full presentation, and b) other researchers who will not be making a full presentation.
