31 March 4th Sunday in Lent

The parable of the Prodigal Son appears only in the Gospel of Luke, where it is the longest of the parables that he recounts and is the best known. The father and his two sons are “united by bonds of blood, but even more by bonds of covenant. It is the order of covenant - the logic of the covenant - that underpins this parable and shapes the drama.” (Scott Hahn) At the time when Jesus was recounting this parable, it was most unusual among the Jews for a son to request his inheritance while his father was still alive. It made it appear as if he were impatient for the death of his father. Accordingly, the younger son in the parable appeared disrespectful, at the very least. When the young man travelled to a distant land, he placed himself outside the covenant and all that that entailed. Having received from his father the material goods which he had requested, the son squandered them on things of no value. Moreover, he lost the sonship, which he lived at home. At first it was the loss of the material goods which made him think about his present state. He recalled the life of his father’s servants compared to his life now that there was a famine in the land. This caused him to consider the fact that, more important than the material goods which he had lost, he had lost something of far greater importance, his sonship. With this realisation, his journey towards repentance was nearing its end. He knew that he had to return to his father and tell him that he was sorry for how he had behaved and ask for his forgiveness. He realised that he could not expect to return to his former position, but he decided that, even to be a servant in his father’s house was better than to be a paid servant in a far country. For a son “to be a hired servant in his own father’s house is certainly a great humiliation and source of shame. Nevertheless, the prodigal son is ready to undergo that humiliation and shame” (DM5§5).

However, when he arrived at this father’s house, the prodigal son was welcomed in a totally unexpected manner. His father rushed to greet him and gave him little chance to make the fine speech he had prepared. As Pope John Paul II says, “Although the word ‘mercy’ does not appear, it nevertheless expresses the essence of the divine mercy in a particularly clear way” (DM5§2). The father, having departed entirely from the behaviour which would have been expected of him in these circumstances, preferred to rejoice that his son had returned; that he had found his dignity as a son and that, although for a time he had been lost, he had been found again. When the father said that his younger son “was dead and was alive again” (Luke 15:24) he was transferring the son’s covenant status from curse to blessing.

When the elder son arrived home and heard the sounds of a great party coming from within his home, rather than hurrying to join it, he asked one of the servants for the reason for the sounds. On being told that his younger brother had returned and that the party was for him, he was greatly angered. When the father came out from his house to meet the elder son, he pleaded with him to come in and his refusal was a public humiliation. Now that the younger son has healed the rift between himself and his father, it is evident that it is the elder son who is now lost. He saw himself as a slave who had spent his life obeying orders and working, not for a father but for a hard taskmaster who had not even allowed him to celebrate with friends. He is completely lost in resentment of both his father and his younger brother.

This Lent let us return to our Heavenly Father asking Him for his forgiveness for our failings, certain that, like the father in Jesus’ parable, He is waiting eagerly to forgive us.

CATECHIST’S CORNER

Sloth is probably the most perplexing of the seven deadly sins and one that is hardest to define. Many probably think that it refers to laziness, but in fact it is often related to the Latin idea of accidia, which is sometimes translated as “spiritual weariness”. It begins with losing our appetite for God and a disinclination to pray. St Thomas Aquinas describes sloth as “sadness and abhorrence or boredom regarding spiritual or divine good.” Many a Christian has substituted a taste for liturgy, church music or theological ideas for a desire for God Himself. So what is the antidote to sloth? How can we restore the delight in life and the passion for goodness that are its opposites? St Thomas Aquinas advises us to listen to the spiritual wisdom of the masters of the spiritual life. The problem for us is that one of the effects of sloth is to make us feel that no-one has any wisdom to impart. However, if we make the effort to listen to the masters of the spiritual life, we may get a surprise. One of those masters of spiritual wisdom is St Paul, whose advice is to “rejoice in the Lord always.” If we do this, we can defeat this final deadly sin.
