8. Programme Aims:

The Honours programme in Gaelic is designed to allow students, whether they enter the University as native speakers, entrants with learners' Gaelic, or complete beginners, to develop advanced Gaelic language skills, as well as acquiring in-depth knowledge and understanding of Scottish Gaelic language, culture and literature, and those of related languages such as Irish. Where appropriate to the student's level, courses are offered through the medium of Gaelic. In the two Honours years, students will partake in courses primarily through Gaelic;

¹ This specification provides a concise summary of the main features of the programme and the learning outcomes that a typical student might reasonably be expected to achieve and demonstrate if full advantage is taken of the learning opportunities that are provided. More detailed information on the learning outcomes, content and teaching, learning and assessment methods of each course can be found in course handbooks and other programme documentation and online at www.gla.ac.uk whether these be language skills classes or courses on Gaelic literature and culture. This programme aims:

The accuracy of the information in this document is reviewed periodically by the University and may be checked by the Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education.

- To train students to a high level of proficiency in reading, speaking and writing Scottish Gaelic, enabling them to communicate readily on a personal and professional basis.
- To offer students from first year through Honours level a range of courses through the medium of Gaelic on Scottish Gaelic literature and culture.
- To offer students at Honours level a range of courses exploring other linguistic and cultural aspects of Gaelic and courses introducing related languages and stages of Gaelic, such as Modern Irish and Classical Gaelic.
- To provide students with a variety of approaches to teaching and learning, and a supportive, vibrant study environment that will stimulate and promote independent study.
- To provide a broad and challenging intellectual training.
- To provide a foundation of personal and core skills for those students seeking employment on graduation, or further academic research.
- To deploy the research expertise of staff to promote the interaction of teaching and research within this course, as part of Glasgow's commitment to enhancing its reputation as a research-led university.

9. Intended Learning Outcomes of Programme:

- The ability to make effective and appropriate use of IT, both as a learning tool and as a means of communication.

10. Typical Learning and Teaching Approaches:

Pre-Honours level

Fluent speakers are taught through the medium of Gaelic and a range of approaches are taken.

- Literature elements of level 1 and 2 courses include a combination of lectures and the reading and discussion in class of a variety of literary texts, poetry and prose. Some translation into English is involved, where appropriate, to deal with complex vocabulary and structures.
- Weekly oral classes focus on building students' active vocabulary and on promoting discussion in Gaelic in small groups and as a class. Students have the opportunity to deliver presentations and to receive feedback from teaching staff and from students on their delivery.
- Written language classes focus on grammar, register, idiom and vocabulary in order to ensure that students are able to produce written work in Gaelic of a high standard relevant to a range of situations. Students receive detailed feedback on their assessed assignments and have the opportunity to use online exercises to reinforce the grammar points covered.

Students who do not already have a qualification in Gaelic spend years 1 and 2 learning the structures of the language and a range of vocabulary and idiom.

- In Level 1 there are four lectures per week outlining the key grammatical structures of the language. There is a high level of student involvement in these with structures being practiced as soon as they have been introduced. Additional weekly oral classes allow students to practice the grammar and vocabulary of the course in smaller groups and builds students' confidence in using the language. A very extensive range of bespoke online exercises allows students to reinforce the grammar being introduced throughout the course.
- Level 2 involves a combination of lectures and small group work in which a range of literary texts are studied. There is a gradual movement over the course of the year to tuition through the medium of Gaelic and students write literary essays in Gaelic, with specific language support for this from teaching staff.
- Language classes in level 2 focus on extending students' vocabulary and on developing their idiom through directed exercises, topic-based group work and the delivery of short presentations by students. Feedback is provided on delivery by teaching staff and by students.
- Written language exercises, on which staff provide detailed comment, allow students to develop their writing skills in a range of registers and relevant to a variety of situations.

Honours Level

- Many of our Honours level courses are taught and assessed through the medium of Gaelic, enhancing students' comprehension of, and ability to communicate articulately in, the language.

- Courses dealing with literature and culture generally involve a combination of lectures, seminars with a high level of student discussion, and student presentations, with increasing emphasis on student participation as each semester progresses.
- Subject specific knowledge is developed as are key transferable skills such as the ability to synthesise, analyse and evaluate a range of sources and arguments, and to engage in debate and discussion with fellow students and staff on issues relevant to individual courses.
- Written and oral language skills continue to be developed throughout the Honours years with students having the opportunity to write, translate, and deliver presentations on a wide range of topics relevant to contemporary Gaelic Scotland and beyond.
- Students' independent research skills are developed through the dissertation which they write in their final year. A dissertation course is offered to all Celtic and Gaelic Honours students which addresses such as issues as identifying and refining a topic, undertaking the research and matters of ethics. Each student is supervised by a member of staff with research expertise in their chosen topic and they are supported through a series of individual meetings with this staff member who provides them with ongoing advice,

11. Typical Assessment Methods:

Students are assessed throughout this programme by a variety of methods. Language skills are assessed in both written and oral dimensions, through exercises, written essays and projects and written and oral examinations, from first year through Honours. Other courses dealing with, for instance, Gaelic literature or linguistics are assessed by means of essays, seminar presentations and written examinations. An in-depth individual dissertation is a requirement of all Honours students, and the final written project is submitted for assessment.

Language exercises and exams are structured to correspond to course material throughout, and a variety of formative exercises, such as writing assignments and mock orals, are in place to allow students to become familiar with demonstrating their learning achievements. Seminar presentations are usually prepared for using worksheets that clarify both key reading material and key questions to be covered. Essays, in common with most arts-based subjects, allow students to reflect on and express the results of their consideration of key topics in the course on the basis of both participation and individual research and reading; choices of questions and reading lists are provided.

Throughout the four year Honours degree, courses are structured so as to allow for a good balance of examined, written and oral/presented work, with most courses being assessed 50% by examination and 50% by coursework.
